Global Briefing - 6 PM (Central Time)

My Victor Ochen has served as the Founder and Executive Director of the African Youth Initiative Network since 2005. Born in northern Uganda, he spent 8 years as a violent conflict that displaced over three million people and over 60,000 children, including his brother, who was forcefully abducted and recruited as a child soldier. At only 12 years old, Ochen founded the Peace Club while living in the Internally Displaced People's IDP camp in northern Uganda. The Peace Club's primary mission was to mobilize and coordinate child soldier recruitment, which was being conducted due to the armed conflict between the Government of Uganda and the Lord's Resistance Army.

Ochen was the first Ugandan and the youngest ever African nominated for Nobel Peace Prize in 2015, a special recognition on which His Grace the Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the Nobel Peace laureate, commented, "His journey with peace is led by Victor Ochen, one of our 'children', is leading change in Africa. Victor is part of a special group of African young leaders who have graduated from the program that began my career and I wish him well as a notable recipient of this auspicious honor."

Forbes Magazine named Victor Ochen in 2015 as one of the 10 most powerful and new faces in Africa. Ochen is the 1st recipient of Archbishop Desmond Tutu's prestigious African Young Leaders Fellowship for his courageous leadership in promoting peace. Ochen is a role model for young people, especially those caught up in the bandwagon of conflict – championing the protection of children's rights and promoting a culture of peace and tolerance.

GLOBAL BRIEFING SERIES

Jed Willard
Director of the EDC Center for Global Engagement, Harvard University

Truth, Fiction, and Lies in the New Media Environment: the Existential Struggle for Global Democracies

The rise of social media and the fragmentation of traditional news media have led to a global crisis of disinformation. Governments, non-government actors, and shadow groups are spreading misleading and often false information, which undermines democracy around the world. Democratic nations that depend on a certain level of social and political trust to function properly face an existential crisis as that trust is eroded. How can democratic governments face this crisis to rebuild faith in democratic practices and values? What can citizens do?

Jed Willard has consulted with governments and other international organizations, helping them understand prevalent and emerging narratives – the drivers of public opinion and sentiment – and creating strategies and structures to effectively engage citizens around the globe. Willard is also Founding Director Emeritus of the Public Diplomacy Collaborative at Harvard Kennedy School, applying social sciences to international communication challenges and bringing together public diplomacy scholars and practitioners across sectors, disciplines, and national boundaries.
